Highlights This Week:

Week ends without funding bill agreement

By Jeff Packham

The Journal Record

Education funding will have to wait.

The Legislature won't have an opportunity to take up a measure to fund education until at least Monday, after convening Thursday without an agreement.

It appeared the parties involved may be closer to an agreement, however, after Gov. Brad Henry said he would approve an education funding bill that didn't contain all-day kindergarten.

House Speaker Todd Hiatt, R-Kellyville, and Senate Minority Leader Glenn Coffee, R-Oklahoma City, had earlier accused the governor's office of being responsible for stalling the discussions. Hiatt said the governor's office had not been helpful in the discussions between Senate and House leadership while Coffee said the governor refused to budge.

"He's blocking a budget deal on education because he's married to certain programs," Coffee said.

Senate Appropriations Chairman Johnnie Crutchfield, D-Ardmore, said he just wanted to pass a budget that fully funded all state agencies and then move to discussions on what to do with the additional revenues. He said he wanted to make sure that the Legislature could reach agreement, adding that all-day kindergarten didn't have to be a barrier in budget discussions.

"It's the governor's project," Crutchfield said. "We could offer a budget without it."

Hiatt said Republicans were seeking $163 million in permanent tax cuts but Henry and the Senate Democrats wanted to spend the entire surplus – estimated at more than $600 million – on funding state government. Hiatt said the governor was standing in the way of positive negotiations and that his office would be excluded from future discussions involving the budget.

Henry said his only concern was that education funding had not been approved and he encouraged the Legislature to pass the education budget.

"I don't care what political spin Speaker Hiatt puts on the budget discussions as long as he passes a comprehensive education budget," Henry said. "I'm more than happy to give the speaker credit if that's what it takes to break the logjam and get schools the funding information they need. I just want them to stop making excuses and pass the education budget."

Crutchfield said that Hiatt viewed the budget issues strictly from a numbers perspective while the Democrats looked at the bigger picture. He said Democrats were looking at the overall impact on families and individuals while Republicans focused on the financial figures.

"If you look at everything in (terms of) numbers, I don't see that as family values," Crutchfield said. "I see faces. I don't see a balance sheet."

Crutchfield was expected to meet with House Appropriations and Budget Chairman Chris Bengé again on Thursday. No announcement was made as to when the education bill would be taken up in the future, but the deadline for passage of bills is April 28. The statutory deadline to fund education passed earlier this month.
